

a retractable covering for a door including a housing mounted on one side of the door as best seen in relation to Figure 1 and 2. The housing is mounted directly onto the door frame as a supplementary member and then extending outwardly away from the frame. The housing therefore (50), can be readily seen by all observing the installation as extending from the plane of the building as seen in Figure 1. No where within the Thumann reference is there contemplated directly or indirectly, or is there any motivation for Thumann to include the screen cassette within a hollow pocket provided with a frame section of the door.

Nor would it be obvious to those skilled in the art when reading the Thumann reference to arrive at the structure defined in now amended Claim 1, since the essence of the invention, that is the jamb pocket being provided in the jamb portions, is simply not taught or inferred directly or indirectly from the teachings of the 244 reference. There is no motivation therein to arrive at the structure defined by Applicant's Claim 1 set out below.

A window assembly comprising a retractable screen disposed with a screen cassette contained within a jamb pocket portion of a jamb of the assembly, said jamb pocket being defined by three sides of the interior of said jamb, the screen accumulating on and paying out from a spring biased roll provided with said cassette disposed within said jamb pocket portion, the screen being retractable for egress or cleaning purposes, and available as desired.
